

The book was found

Art Since 1900: 1900 To 1944 (Third Edition) (Vol. 1)

Synopsis

Five of the most influential and provocative art historians of our time have come together to provide a comprehensive history of art in the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. Art Since 1900 introduces students to the key theoretical approaches to modern and contemporary art. A flexible year-by-year structure and extensive cross-referencing allow teachers and students to pursue a chronological approach and/or to study the currents of art since 1900 by medium, theme, country, or region. This completely updated and expanded third edition contains over 125 essays, each focusing on a crucial event in the history of art from 1900 to the present. Ten new essays cover subjects such as Moscow conceptualism, abstract film, postmodern architecture, and queer art, as well as artists from emerging economies and the impact of the market on current art practice. Text boxes provide further information on key figures and issues. Five introductions explain the different methods of art history at work in the book. There are two roundtable discussions between the authors, and all reference material has been updated. 233 full-color and 188 black-and-white illustrations

Book Information

Paperback: 392 pages

Publisher: Thames & Hudson; 3 edition (September 1, 2016)

Language: English

ISBN-10: 050029271X

ISBN-13: 978-0500292716

Product Dimensions: 8.6 x 1 x 11 inches

Shipping Weight: 3.3 pounds (View shipping rates and policies)

Average Customer Review: 5.0 out of 5 stars 2 customer reviews

Best Sellers Rank: #43,543 in Books (See Top 100 in Books) #13 in Books > Textbooks >

Humanities > Design #42 in Books > Reference > Encyclopedias & Subject Guides > Art #88

in Books > Arts & Photography > History & Criticism > Criticism

Customer Reviews

Hal Foster is Townsend Martin Professor of Art and Archaeology at Princeton University. A co-editor of October magazine and books, he is the editor of The Anti-Aesthetic, and the author of Design and Crime, Recording, The Return of the Real, Compulsive Beauty and The Art-Architecture Complex. Rosalind Krauss is University Professor of Modern Art and Theory at Columbia University. Yve-Alain Bois is an author and professor of Art History at the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, New Jersey. Benjamin H. D. Buchloh is the Andrew W. Mellon Professor of Modern Art at Harvard University. David Joselit worked as a curator at The Institute of Contemporary Art in Boston from 1983 to 1989 where he co-organized several exhibitions including "Dissent: The Issue of Modern Art in Boston," "Endgame: Reference and Simulation in Recent Painting and Sculpture," and "The British Edge." He is Distinguished Professor of the History of Art at Yale University. Joselit is the author of Infinite Regress: Marcel Duchamp 1910-1941, Feedback: Art and Politics in the Age of Television, and American Art Since 1945.

This two volume set is justifiably considered "the one book on 20th Century art to read, if you can only read one." It covers the century exhaustively, without managing to bore or slide too far into pretension. No easy task, that.

Art Since 1900 opens each chapter with a momentous event in art history, and the first one is Sigmund Freud's Interpretation of Dreams. Using the events as a springboard, we see how modern art began (according to the authors) with new ideas on thinking. Radical styles in painting actually began years earlier in Paris, with Van Gogh and Gauguin pushing the limits of acceptability, but in this book it was Gustav Klimt's open defiance of the establishment. Klimt's dark subject matter is a proof, along with Freud's work, that Vienna could be a place of rebel thinking. Preceded by artists like Gauguin and Toulouse-Lautrec, known for bizarre colors and strange subject matter, we can deduce that modern art was decades in the making. Another source of the change in taste, according to the first chapter, is the rejection of cliché. Years earlier, Auguste Rodin created his famous Balzac statue as a formless column, with no indication that the subject was a writer (Balzac wears a bathrobe, because he often wrote late at night.) Similarly, Picasso's Demoiselles d'Avignon removed the original plan to include a sailor (the client) and the medical student with a skull (memento mori). The chapter does not go into detail about the African symbolism in the painting, though it's discussed in another essay titled Dread, Desire, and the Demoiselles. The second volume (it's a two-book set) begins in 1945, when New York City and Chicago were becoming ground zero for the art world. Paris and Vienna were no longer the art capitals of the world, thanks to WWII driving the artists out, but keep in mind that years earlier, Paris and Vienna had pushed out Venice, Florence, and Rome. Where Paris was known for Chagall and Picasso, New York was now home to Pollock, De Koonig, and Mark Rothko, many of whom began in the WPA era. The authors make use of contemporary journalism, with sources from Clement Greenberg and Harold Rosenberg in the chapter on American abstract-impressionism, followed by realism making a comeback. I'd read a similar book, titled Art Since 1945, back when I was in college. It ended with the 1980s artists like Haring and Basquiat (both of whom were proteges of Warhol) and Barbara Kruger. In every generation the textbook gets bigger, giving more attention to artists who, fifteen years ago, got no love. Take for instance Nicole Eisenman, whose 1996 works are included here, but would not have been included in this book in 2000. The Young British Artists are another movement that got more extensive coverage since their 1990s debut. However, the book's discussion of their origin is a bit slim, attributing them to Margaret Thatcher's increased support for business, and the resulting British nouveau-riche class that sponsored Britain's emerging artists. It is an accepted fact that early 20th century Britain didn't have millionaires like Guggenheim and Rockefeller who bankrolled modern art, so Britain's artists were a bit slower in their emergence. It wasn't until the 90s that the new British upper class would sponsor artists like Damien Hirst and Rachel Whiteread. I remember the YBA show at the Brooklyn Museum back in 2000, where Charles Saatchi displayed his collection, aptly titled Sensation, as a way of introducing NY's audiences to his country's artists. It was like The Armory show 90 years earlier, where American audiences were introduced to Europe's modern art. However, I was not ignorant of the YBA before the Saatchi show; I'd seen the Chapman Brothers show at the Gagosian, and Whiteread's pieces were displayed publicly back in 1994. Mayor Giuliani's harsh criticism of Chris Offili's Holy Virgin Mary With Elephant Dung only added to the publicity. The use of newsworthy events to begin each chapter makes sense, given that history will always be the biggest influence on art, and not the other way around. You have changes in economics, which leads to patronage, and then you have museums that can launch an artist's career by giving him/her a platform. Not discussed in the book, though I would like to see it, is the subject of the artist neighborhoods in different countries. New York City had Soho, and I don't know what the equivalent would be in London or Beijing. Chinese artist like Ai Wei Wei come at the end of the book, with a small entry, though Asian artists have been gaining ground for 15 years. I would read this book alongside Sanctuary (the studios of the YBA) and Dark Matter (how art has gone from commercialism to activism) in order to gain an understanding of the role of art in modern history. The authors make no effort to hide the fact that the scholarship is Eurocentric at the beginning, and US-centered after 1945. However, the USA had the Ashcan school in the years before 1945, with artists like George Bellows and his boxer painting, and then you had Edward Hopper's streetscapes, but these guys don't really come into play in the book. They were well-known in the USA, but rarely got any attention in Britain or Europe. I doubt that any of the artwork's in the Metropolitan Museum's American Wing are well known outside of the USA. Let me sum up by saying that this book can satisfy an entire course on modern art. It makes great effort to include non-US artists, though there's little attention to artists from Latin America, the Middle East, Australia, or Africa. That could change, however, and I imagine this book will need a third volume in the next decade.

Download to continue reading...

Art Since 1900: 1900 to 1944 (Third Edition) (Vol. 1) Art Since 1900: Volume 1: 1900 to 1944; Volume 2: 1945 to the Present (Third Edition) (Vol. Two-Volume Set) Art Since 1900: 1945 to the Present (Third Edition) (Vol. 2) Interior Design Since 1900 (Third Edition) (World of Art) Art Since 1900: Modernism, Antimodernism, Postmodernism, Vol. 2 - 1945 to the Present, 2nd Edition Third Eye: Third Eye Activation Mastery, Easy And Simple Guide To Activating Your Third Eye Within 24 Hours (Third Eye Awakening, Pineal Gland Activation, Opening the Third Eye) The Conquering Tide: War in the Pacific Islands, 1942-1944: War in the Pacific Islands, 1942-1944 "1944 Fashion Since 1900 (Second Edition) (World of Art) Hawaiian National Bibliography, 1780-1900: Vol. 4: 1881-1900 Let's Grill! Best BBQ Recipes Box Set: Best BBQ Recipes from Texas (vol.1), Carolinas (Vol. 2), Missouri (Vol. 3), Tennessee (Vol. 4), Alabama (Vol. 5), Hawaii (Vol. 6) South Korea since 1980 (The World Since 1980) Modern Architecture Since 1900 New Music at Darmstadt: Nono, Stockhausen, Cage, and Boulez (Music Since 1900) The Spectral Piano: From Liszt, Scriabin, and Debussy to the Digital Age (Music Since 1900) French Music and Jazz in Conversation: From Debussy to Brubeck (Music since 1900) Schoenberg's Twelve-Tone Music: Symmetry and the Musical Idea (Music Since 1900) Musical Witness and Holocaust Representation (Music since 1900) The Legacy of Johann Strauss: Political Influence and Twentieth-Century Identity (Music Since 1900) U.S. Diplomacy Since 1900 El Salvador, imágenes para no olvidar (1900-1999) =: El Salvador, images we must not forget (1900-1999) (Spanish Edition)

Contact Us

DMCA

Privacy

FAQ & Help