Helen Rowe is a children's book illustrator with a background in ceramic design and greeting cards. She began with children's books by adapting some of her greeting card characters into scenes, and has been enjoying working on them ever since. She lives in Wiltshire, England.

Our 13-month-old daughter has discovered the world of pop-up books, and she is obsessed. The story in this particular book is a bit short, even compared to some of her other pop-ups or board books, so we have to read it multiple times, but the pop-up part is great for her. The pop-ups themselves are all hidden behind some type of door, blanket, or what have you so it encourages fine motor skills in grabbing each piece to move it and make the animal pop up. I also like that this book is about common household pets that she can see anywhere, versus farm animals, jungle animals, etc. When we read about the cat or dog in the book, she looks for our cats or our dog. That may not be the intention of the book, but word association (or recognition) is a nice bonus from this

My daughter, who is 6 months old, usually loves pop up books but is not interested in this book. However, I like how the book uses some interesting animals that I have not seen in other kids books, such as a guinea pig and a hamster for instance.

This book has been a favorite since we received it. Fun colors, fun drawings. My little one loves to find all the pets under each flap.

It is cute, but not very sturdy for new hands learning to be gentle. Colors are a bit subdued too. But it is a sweet book.

daughter loves it

Very cute book. My 17 month old son loves it!! The pop ups are on the fragile side. Be careful!

Loved it so much that I re-ordered. Perfect for little hands!!!!

My niece likes to read these books and have them read to her
